HELLO,

When I listened to the episode of How I Built This featuring Miguel McKelvey, I knew that WeWork was where I belonged. It really resonated with me when Miguel said that people are looking for something that goes beyond just work, but that we're all looking for something that makes what we do every day a more important part of who we are. I've followed WeWork for a few years now and I was most drawn to the core mission of creating a world where people work to make a life, not just a living.

Over the last 9 years, I've built my career on learning how to build strong, healthy, and trusting relationships with my clients, partners, teams, and executives. In order to always know how to best provide what they need to achieve success. I consistently strive to boost the creativity and productivity of my team, while keeping each task client-centered. Among my colleagues, I'm known as the one who can keep their cool and pick up the pieces, no matter what amount of you-know-what hits the fan.

During my career, I've been able to work for a creative start-up, a boutique sports marketing agency, and a national restaurant chain. These experiences have given me a great perspective and insight on how to motivate a small team to produce great results, what to do when a client asks for the sun, the moon and stars by EOD and how to sell ice to an Eskimo!

I've always been comfortable wearing many hats, and I never stray away from rolling up my sleeves to get the job done. If I'm presenting to a client and the video stops working, I'm not one to just call IT and wait. I'll (gracefully) crawl under the table, and check that everything is properly plugged in. My career has prepared me to take on any challenge that comes my way and I'm ready to take on a new challenge as the Community Manager at WeWork.

Seeing the growth the company has had and the different avenues it's gone down to improve how we not only look at how we work, but also how we live is something that I want to be a part of. I would love the opportunity to discuss my experience and the value I can offer you at WeWork. Please reach out to me for any further questions.

Thank you for your time and consideration,
Josh Owen
